| Yes - ALL of our new juvenile books are set to High Demand item types  | No  |   | Yes - ALL of our new YA books are set to High Demand item types        | No   |   | A 21 day loan period for all juvenile and YA items is OK, but 2 renewals is excessive. A high demand item should not be able to be gone from the library for 2 months. That would mean only 2 patrons could potentially check the item out locally before it would be time to take it off of high demand. Not good. |

If you get a family checking juvenile and adult new and old books, there would be too many dates for them to keep track of.  |

| Yes - ALL of our new juvenile books are set to High Demand item types  | Yes   |       | Yes - ALL of our new YA books are set to High Demand item types       | Yes   |       | I believe allowing for 21 day high demand for Juvenile Books would be a help to our patrons and a help to our staff. Having a mandatory 14 day only high demand option for juvenile books makes them less enticing to patrons who don't want their children's items due on different days from their other items. Also, having children's books not in high demand takes them off our shelves so they are not available when local patrons are looking for new books. With the improved browsing of Aspen, we are noticing more items going through courier including new children's books. A library should be able to choose own check out times based on community needs. Library should make own decision on whether they want 21 or 14 day high demand for there libraries items. Would it be possible to just let the individual library determine if they want 14 day high demand or 21 day high demand regardless of what audience the book is for. This wouldn't affect any other libraries due to item not going in courier until it is taken off of high demand. |

Juvenile books for younger readers (chapter books, leveled readers, picture books) really don't require three weeks to be read, do they?   |
